Hereford Cathedral is a magnificent specimen of Norman work. The earliest record of a building on this site is in A. D. 546, and further in the year 1012 Athelstan built a church here, this being destroyed by when fire in 1056. The present structure was commenced in 1079 by Robert de Losinga and greatly enlarged and improved during the 13th century. A Bishop of Hereford is mentioned in history in A. D. 544 and there is an unbroken chain from 676 — a notable record.
